

Creative Group Supervision for Executive Coaches

An opportunity to refresh and reflect on your coaching practice through a creative lens with Alison Hodge

Being an executive coach is both rewarding and challenging. At the same time, you frequently have to juggle the needs of your clients with your own need for support and feedback and give yourself time to reflect on your coaching practice.

In 2011 Alison will offer a unique opportunity to a small group of six professional coaches to work together with a particular focus on the use of creative resources to explore your client work and coaching practice. As a result, you'll gain an understanding of the effectiveness of right-brain approaches to effect change. You'll also develop your ability to apply creative interventions in your coaching practice.

The group will be self-determining and will co-create the learning and development goals. Together we will create the safe space for you to reflect and explore.

Alison is an accredited EMCC Master Coach, a qualified coaching supervisor and is currently reading for her Doctorate in Coaching Supervision at Middlesex University.

As a participant, you'll be able to:

- Work with right-brained approaches such as cards and natural objects to explore and resolve client issues along with the familiar dialogic norms
- Give and receive feedback on the content and process of your work
- Work with the group using creative interventions to enhance your facilitation skills
- Enjoy personal and professional support in a stimulating environment

Format

The group will meet for a programme of six sessions starting in 2011 (dates to be agreed by the group). Each day will run from 10.00am to 4.30pm in West London.

Fees will be £1200 + VAT (paid in advance) for the 12 month programme, or alternatively £1320 + VAT (by instalments).
